

A Story of Inspiring Goodness

Six decades of baking joy into every bite

FOREWORD

*This is not a catalogue.
It is a story.*

It begins in a small tea kiosk on First Cross Street, Colombo. A man with flour on his hands and goodness in his heart. It ends if stories like this ever do somewhere on a table in London, Lagos, or Lahore, where someone opens a packet and feels, inexplicably, at home.

Turn each page as you would a letter from an old friend. You will find biscuits, yes. But mostly you will find people, moments, and the stubborn belief that what you feed the world matters.

"No biscuit, not worthy to feed your own children should leave the gates of Maliban to feed the world."

— A. G. Hinnyappuhamy, Founder

ORIGIN STORY

COLOMBO, 1935

A tea kiosk. A dream.

A tea kiosk. A dream. He came from the south of Ceylon looking for something he could not yet name. A G Hinnyappuhamy set up a simple tea kiosk on First Cross Street, Colombo, Sri Lanka. Hot tea. Fresh biscuits. A smile for every customer.

By 1935, that kiosk had become the Maliban Hotel on Maliban Street in Pettah. And the hunger for quality, for scale, for something lasting hadn't dimmed at all. By 1954, Ceylon's first mechanised biscuit line was running. By 1964 the world was already eating Maliban.

THE JOURNEY

From art[□]isan bakery to nat[□]ional[□] con

A street. A name. A dream with flour on its hands. By the 1940s, biscuits were being shaped by hand in Kotahena. By 1954, Ceylon had its first mechanised biscuit line. By 1964, the world was already a customer. Today 37 countries, 25 million packs every month. One standard. Unchanged. Uncompromised. Unmistakably Maliban.

THE CRACKER RANGE

Every morning starts here.

There is a particular sound crisp, decisive when you snap a Maliban cream cracker. For millions of Sri Lankan families, that sound is the unofficial start of morning. Butter or jam, it doesn't matter. The ritual is the thing.

From the original Smart Cream Cracker to the high-fibre Bran Cracker and the punchy Spicy Cracker, each one was designed to hold its own alongside a cup of Ceylon's finest.

"A cracker is not just food. It is the first thought of the day, sliced neatly and spread with possibility."
